geaud and Changstmer are officers of great resolution, and participate in the hostility of the Constitutioned against the Assembly; and unless the republicans can gain Napoleon, expel the present cabinet, and gain a new one, I do not see why the Assembly will not be obliged to yield, either to a vote or to force; for I am satisfied that, at this time, the people would follow Napoleon and his ministry, in overthrowing the Assembly by force, if it should become necessary to get rid of it. I am sorry to say it, but a republican government is not, at this moment, popular in France—perhaps it will be again, in six months; but so much has been done to dishonor one, and so much misrepre sentation has been scattered among the people, and there has been so much sufering in business, and such an increase in the public expenses, that the republic has but slight hold upon the affections of the people, who are very changeable in their opinions and impulses. I consider that all depends upon the course adopted by Napoleon. He can save, or overthrow it, as he pleases, in his present state of popularity; but I would not admit that he will have so much power in three months, for his ministry is growing unpopular, and they may draw sfert them his political influence. It seems to be the fate of all public men and public bodies in France, to be pulled down as soon after they come into existence as possible; the work is commenced immediately, and the presentation of political influence. It seems to be the fate of all public men and public bodies in France, with Austria and Naples, to restore the Pope to political power; but the correctments of this statement is semi-officially denied.

Many persons charge upon the new ministry, that they have entered into an alliance with Austria and Naples, to restore the Pope to political power; but the correctments of this statement is semi-officially denied.

SENATE.

TURSDAY, Feb. 2, 1849.

After the presentation of petitions and memorials on various subjects,
Mr. Mason offered a resolution, which was adopted, directing the Committee on Military Affairs to inquire into the expediency of directing arms to be furnished to emigrants to California and New Mexico, on certain conditions.

The bill to reduce the rates of postage, and correct the abuse of the franking privilege was taken up, and Mr. Niles replied to the remarks of Mr. Allen delivered on a former occasion. He was somewhat caustic.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.
On motion of Mr. Rockwell, of Connecticut, the House resolved listelf into a Committee of the Whole.
No debate was permitted. After a session of three hours, the Committee arose, when thirty-one private bills were passed.

Mr. Houston, of Delaware, reported a bill to pay a widow a hundred dollars, in lieu of the Treasury script which was due to her husband, who died after the Mexican war, and who had received an honorabie discharge. He represented that the widow is poor, and has a large family of children, and wished the bill to be put on its passage. As general consent was required, and there being an objection, the question was not taken.

And the House adjourned.
